When you walk onto the broad Blue Heron Hideaways house front decks, you stop still and stare. Directly above and beyond you an endless magical aura of ocean and soft pale pink beaches unfolds, it sings to you from all sides, for as far as your amazed eyes can see. Here, there is this mystical feeling that creeps into your heart, touches your mind, and soul. A certainty, a sense of belonging: calming your thoughts into peace; into a rare contentment. Suddenly, you are at one with the celestial scenery; surrounded by spirits of this place; sounds of whispering waves, sea birds songs, an ancient mermaid kiss in the salt wind upon your cheek. Here is an eternity of times, stories, tales of peoples who have loved this place they sweetly speak to you through the soft summer breeze, saying "This is your place ... At last you have found it. Your own special paradise. Your Shangri-la. You sigh, a long sigh and then a small hand comes into your big hand; an unusually quiet child's voice whispers; Grandpa, wow, that's an ocean! You told me about it. wow! And somehow that big hand becomes young again like the small one. You pick your child up and you run down the sand dune steps and out into the sea laughing and shrieking as the cool waves clear your stress
